WEATHER

WEATHER SYNOPSIS BY REGION:

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA

A few light showers possible Saturday morning as a weak system passes through. A stronger system will approach the coast Sunday bringing a chance of precipitation across the north state on Sunday with most areas seeing a chance of rain or mountain snow on Monday. Breezy south winds will accompany this system especially over the Sierra Cascade Range. High pressure will begin to rebuild on Tuesday lifting the precipitation threat northward. Wednesday through Friday is forecasted to be dry with well above normal temperatures under strong high pressure.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

High pressure will weaken with a weak trough of low pressure moving inland through California on Monday. This will bring stronger onshore flow with a cooling trend, higher humidities, and gusty west winds in the mountains and deserts. Slow warming for Tuesday and Wednesday. Warmer Thursday and Friday with high pressure aloft and surface high pressure over the great basin bringing gusty northeast winds near the coastal foothills at times and lower inland humidities.
